

Curious

Since school hasn't begun yet, I'm feeling curious about what this year will be like academically. In the past, I've had a variety of different teachers with different expectations about homework, school work, and tests. Last year I had a teacher that put a lot of emphasis on tests and homework, and that made that class more stressful. It was a shame because I really like that subject and she made it less fun. To deal with her intensity, I tried to laugh about it whenever I could. It made me feel better because so many of the things she did were ridiculous. I also made plans for studying for her tests and completing homework on time. Her expectations for work schedule were just not feasible for me, so it was helpful to make a more personalized plan. Her class still wasn't my favorite, but doing those things made it more manageable. Because I know I can work through difficult classes and teachers, I'm curious and excited about

What I have next this school year!